

I request that the FCC NOT implement any regulation that lessens the protection provided by the Indiana Telephone Privacy law. I currently participate in that program and it has made a dramatic improvement in decreasing the harrassing phone calls, at inconvenient times, from rude, and often obnoxious sales people. I PAY for my phone service, and believe it is my right to restrict those people from calling me. Prior to participating in the Indiana Privacy law I received solicitation calls every day, including weekends; now I receive about (1) one call every three months. The Federal government should NOT be creating a telephone privacy regulation that interferes with my right to privacy, and security. I pay for the phone, and I elect many Federal officials, and I respectfully request that the FCC NOT get into the "commercial" aspects of communication regulations; you are a Federal agency, not a pawn of the telemarketing companies.
